No one disputes the assection that Pittsburgh can obtain these ores from Virgin's cheaper than she can transport those of Lake Superior to ber manufacturing establishments, and this, it seems to us, ought to warrant the early completion of the road. Now, as the yearly consumption of the Pittsburgh furnaces amounts to 750,000 tons of ore, this alone would do much towards supporting a railroud three hundred miles long. The Philadeights Record, in noticing the proposition to build a road from Pittsburgh to the Virgipla iron region, says the route of such a read must inevitably penetrate the rich bituminous coal-fields of Western Pennsylvania and Virginia, affording facilities for iron manufacture along its whole line. There is an aggregate of capital in the iron business in Western Pennsylvania heavy enough to warrant large outlays in reaching a reliable source of supply of raw material. In the face of western competition, which now threatens to divide a market heretofore almost monopolized by the iron-makers of Pennsylvania, no time is to be lost in securing cheap ores.

WYTHEVILLE.

ITS ATTRACTIONS-THE ADJOURNMENT OF THE COURT OF APPEALS-OUR TICKET. [Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.] AUGUST 10, 1881.

To a person coming from Eastern Virginia to this mountain town there is a great deal to interest and entertain. Here nature seems to lay herself out to appear to best advantage; and it is here that all who have once seen the loveliness of the place ville the palm for the beauty of its scenery, not to speak of that of its girls, whose charms there is no need, as there is not space enough in this letter to recommend. As objects of special interest to the sight-ser, it is only necessary to mention the "Chimney Rocks" and the newly-discover-ed "Crockett's Cave," near this place.

It is a fact well known to many of your readers that Wythe county was cut off from Montgomery about the year 1790, and was called after the great chancellor of that name. This place, which is the countyseat, is situated upon a spur of the Alle-ghantes, and glories in being 2,300 feet above the sea-level. The last census showed a population of 2 300 inhabitants; and it is claimed by many, that in the proximate future that number will be looked back to with pride only to show how great has been the rapid growth of this flourishing town. The Court of Appeals that has been in regular session here for several weeks will adjourn next Friday. Judge Moneure has been absent during the whole term on account of ill health. During the session o the court several applicants have stood examinations for license to practice law, among whom I have noticed a couple of those who had that course at the University | Cox was in the programme.

There are a great many visitors here from the South, and a weekly "hop" or "Ger-man" adds to the sociability of the place. Saturday night Colonel Bogart, of Alabama, delivered an address on the York-town Centennial.

Bishop Whittle preached here twice Sun day, and confirmed seventeen persons. The recent nominations seem to meet with general approbation in this neighbor-

E. E. Moore, of good time at least for that day. A short drive brought them to the pic-nic grounds, where, under the shade of a grand old oak, the party deposited their baskets of good things and stopped for awhile to chat with the boys.

After exploring the "Blowing Cave" the pic-nic company went down to the river, where they were joined by a party of gentlemen from "Waliawhatola Springs," who came down the river in their boots, and : pleasant time was spent in rowing and fishing. On their way home the mountains were made to reecho with their beautiful songs. Some time after the monarch of the West had sank to rest behind the bluecapped peaks the party returned, declaring that twas indeed a happy day to all.

The party was chaperoned by Mrs. Clay Drewry and Mrs. O. M. Marshall, of Rich-
